DINING

Springtime in Boston just wouldn't be right without dining alfresco at Stephanie's on Newbury. Since early April, Stephanie's patio seating has been available to those who are unfazed by the unpredictable Boston weather. As the season kicks into full bloom, expect a bounty of new seasonal menu items, including California-influenced dishes which may feature grilled veggie favorites such as big, gorgeous asparagus; avocados; smoked corn; and several variations of the artichoke. An old favorite, the miso cod, will reappear on the spring menu, and it is sure to be a major hit once again. The menu also will include a lobster-salad sandwich loaded with chunks of fresh lobster, and an assortment of frozen libations, including the ever-popular frozen strawberry margarita. For more information, call 617.236.0990 or visit its Web site www.stephaniesonnewbury.com.

Brownstone flower boxes in bloom signal a season we've long awaited

—one of alfresco lunches in the lazy afternoon; hopeful, half-clad bodies on the esplanade, and orange sunsets licking the sailboat-spotted Charles. Soon, sizzling heat will send some city folks flocking to the beaches and the burbs, but there's always one good reason to remain in Boston: Newbury Street.

Here, in our own urban oasis, you can indulge in every way to pamper your mind, body, and spirit — if for no other occasion than to celebrate the coming of spring.
